(President Ted Blanding sailed the last of November for overseas duty. Cable messages report his safe arrival at an undesignated port, where he is serving as a Chief Petty Officer with the "SeaBees," or Construction Battalion of the Navy. His message to the Toastmasters was written just before his departure.)

My appreciation for what Toastmasters has done for me is greater than ever since I have come into military life — proving again that the training in our clubs fits every condition.

The greatest problem of this group of Chief Petty Officers is to appear effectively before groups either of enlisted men or commissioned officers and to present what they have to say with ease and conviction. Leadership is much the same in every case—or rather, effective leadership is. Training in Toastmasters is the finest possible preparation for such leadership.

One thing which worries some of our men who are leaders in civilian life is their inability to get into the armed services. They must realize that this is no reflection whatever upon their ability or their willingness to serve. Not every man can go into uniform. For every man in the armed forces, there must be many in civilian life, carrying on work just as essential to victory as that done by the Army or Navy.

We must realize further that the civilian tasks must be performed faithfully and well, whether those be the tasks of promoting patriotic projects, or just of raising food and manufacturing essential goods. The men and women at home who are supporting the war effort, maintaining morale, buying bonds and doing the thousand and one things which must be done are serving a part just as important as actual participation in the conflict with arms.

The Toastmasters Clubs have their part, and a very important part, in all this, and one of the best ways our members can demonstrate their loyalty is by keeping their clubs at top efficiency, both in training and in service.

Toastmasters At Work

Davis a Price "Specialist"

Ernest C. Davis, Past President of Toastmasters International, has resigned his position as executive secretary of the Pendleton Chamber of Commerce, in order to accept a post as "price specialist" with the Office of Price Administration in Portland. According to Blair Stewart, State Price Officer, the position involves direction and establishment of price panels in all war price and rationing boards, as well as supervision of field work by representatives of the price division. It is a task of great importance in the fight against inflation, and it is one for which Davis is unusually well qualified. The ability as speaker and organizer which our fellow Toastmaster developed in our work will make his especially effective in this project. His new address is: Ernest C. Davis, 3945 S. E. Pine Street, Portland, Oregon.

Speech Helps Win the War

Captain J. J. Edwardson was formerly a member of the Spokane Tuesday Toastmasters Club. He entered the U. S. Army as a First Lieutenant early in 1941. Immediately, he found his experience in the club valuable to him in a teaching assignment, where much speaking was necessary. Then, in Butte, Montana, where he was assisting in a Field Demonstration, he was unexpectedly called to the microphone to explain the maneuvers which the public had been invited to observe. His performance of this task brought him to the attention of a superior officer who was present, and resulted in his being sent at once to Washington, D. C. From here he started on a coast-to-coast tour of industrial plants, mines and other war work centers, with the rank of Captain in the Public Relations Division of the Army.

"Orchids to McAninch"

This is the heading of an article in the December issue of "The Southern California Minute Man" published by the Southern California War Savings Staff. The article refers to I. A. McAninch, Governor of District Number One of Toastmasters International, and effective leader of speakers in the war effort. Here are the "orchids":

"From General Chairman F. S. Nusbickel, San Dimas, comes the type of statement which all of us like to hear. He says:

"We wish to take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the speaker, I. A. McAninch, whom you sent to us recently. He spoke to the assemblies of both the Grammar and High Schools, the employees of both packing houses, and the local Service Club, making five talks to our townsmen. Mr. McAninch is so obviously a sincere, patriotic man himself that he could not help but put his enthusiastic message over to his audiences, whether they were small children in the schools, or their parents."

Mr. Ralph Smedley, Chairman
Speakers Bureau
Orange County War Savings Committee
First Nat'l Bank
Santa Ana, California

Dear Mr. Smedley:

Mr. Harry Hanson, Chairman of the Orange County War Savings Committee, has told me of the effective service which you and your associates in the Speakers Bureau have rendered our program in Orange County.

In writing to acknowledge this and express the appreciation of the Treasury Department, I would like through you to pay a tribute to Toastmasters International for the fine cooperation which we have had from its members and its component clubs throughout Southern California.

In many instances we have relied almost solely upon its members to carry our speaking program. In all instances, where available, your members have provided our program with leadership.

Success of the War Savings program is a reflection of the composite contributions of time and talent made to us by the splendid citizens who have sensed its importance.

Sincerely yours,

Howard D. Mills

Public Speaking in the Army

Noah D. Alper, formerly of San Francisco and St. Louis Toastmasters Clubs and now with the 263rd Coast Artillery, at Fort Moultrie, S. C.

IN the Army I realize more than ever how important the ability to speak is in all phases of military development and discipline, where so much of the essential information is conveyed by speaking — and in a strong sense, public speaking. Daily I see fine, understanding young men who cannot speak, who cannot convey clearly even simple “orders.” I see these men held back because they lack initiative, confidence, poise—that which Toastmasters International lives to give.

Conscious of this fact, I was very much pleased to find in an Army Manual on Military Training several pages devoted to the subject of public speaking, giving information such as may be found in Toastmasters publications and in the minds of Toastmasters. Here are excerpts from the Manual:

“To make an effective speech, the speaker must be sure of what he says, sure of its soundness, and sure of its clearness and coherence. He must analyze the subject, determine the specific aim of his discourse, collect, evaluate and select his material, and then decide upon what he has to say and how he is to say it.

“There are certain fundamental qualities of address which every speech should have: A sense of communication; physical vitality; enthusiasm; poise and control; genuineness and earnestness.

“The purpose of the speech is to communicate ideas. Public speaking demands the personal touch, interest in the listeners, and a strong sense of talking to them.

“The speaker must think as he progresses, and focus his attention on the ideas to be conveyed.

“Speak slowly; do not hurry. Group the words so as to bring out the meaning. Pause between these groups of words, and think.

“Feel the idea as well as think it. If the speaker does not believe in what he is saying, he will never get the audience to believe in it.

“After thinking and feeling the idea, the speaker makes an effort to adapt himself to the audience. He focuses his eyes on the listeners and gives them his idea as though he really wanted them to get it. Only by taking a lively interest in conveying the idea can the speaker reach the people.

“Next to a sense of communication, the most important quality of a speaker is life, vigor, physical vitality, animation. Strong and positive tone, forceful enunciation, strong position and vigorous gesture count for much.

“Enthusiasm is vital. In practicing delivery, the speaker tries to generate the same enthusiasm as for the final speech.

“To the qualities of physical vitality and enthusiasm, the effective speaker must add poise and control. This does not mean that one must lessen enthusiasm. It simply means that with all his force and enthusiasm, he must be master of himself; he must keep himself in hand.

“The speaker must always be genuine and earnest; he must believe what he says. A sense of humor is a great asset. It is not inconsistent with seriousness, but is in reality an appreciation of relative values.

“To summarize, there are five fundamental qualities without which no speech can succeed. These are a lively sense of communication, physical vitality, enthusiasm, poise and earnestness. With these qualities, a speech may succeed in spite of poor voice, poor gestures, and poor English.

“A speech should not be memorized; nor should one read from a manuscript unless the subject is quite technical, or exactness of statement is the first consideration.

A Word to the Wives

If your husband seems to be unduly enthusiastic over his Toastmasters Club, be content. You are fortunate. There are no women at the Toastmasters Clubs. Don't worry about him.

More than that, he is enthusiastic about education, for that is what the Toastmasters Club gives him. He is developing his talents. Encourage him to keep at it.

A man in one of our clubs obtained a much better position because of his ability to express himself and “sell” himself. Another gained a foothold in public life as a direct result of his training. A third was enabled to set his own “Regarding the use of notes, there is no universally accepted rule. Some authorities urge against all notes, others advise the use of the short outline, while others suggest the use of memoranda consisting of key phrases or sentences. Whatever method will best assist in effectively recalling your ideas should be used.”

From the foregoing, it is evident that the man who enters the armed services of the nation with a background of training in the Toastmasters Club has certain definite advantages over the one who has neglected his training in the art of speech. It is interesting also to observe how closely the teaching in the Army Manual follows the lines consistently taught and observed in all Toastmasters Clubs.

business far ahead because of his Toastmasters experience.

We would not claim that the Toastmasters Club will endow a member with talents he does not possess. Rather, it helps him discover and use what he has and prepares him to seize opportunities which he might miss otherwise for lack of courage.

Yes, “Mrs. Toastmaster,” you can help yourself by encouraging “Mr. Toastmaster” to attend regularly. It will pay dividends in the long run. Don't fear that he will out-talk you. No Toastmaster makes his records at home. You may still retain your supremacy on the home grounds.

Suggestions for the Evaluators

Ernest S. Wooster, Century Toastmasters Club of Santa Ana.

(These suggestions were prepared for use by the evaluators in the Century Toastmasters Club. They cover the subject so thoroughly and so concisely that they are presented to all Toastmasters with the suggestion that this article be carefully preserved for reference and discussion.)

THERE are many styles of criticism which can be used to avoid monotony and duplication. The following are suggested:

Individual—This type involves one critic for each speaker. It is most commonly used, and is good at times but not always the best.

Cursive, or “running” — In this style, the evaluator comments as the speaker talks, interrupting to warn against mannerisms or errors. It is not so frequently used, and should never be used on an inexperienced speaker, nor on anyone without previous warning.

Pre-Evaluation — This can be used when both speaker and critic have been in the club long enough to get used to each other. The critic announces in advance the expected faults and good points of the speaker. The advantage lies in having the speaker's weaknesses brought to mind just before he speaks, so that he may be on guard.

Self-Criticism — The speaker becomes his own critic, either before or after his talk, explaining how he can improve, as he sees himself.

Cross-Fire — Those on one side of the table give favorable comment, and those on the other discuss the unfavorable points. This should be limited to one sentence for each critic.

Good-Bad — This is much the same as the “cross-fire,” except that the selected critics do the favorable and unfavorable commenting, instead of the entire group.

Forum — In this style the chief critic discusses the speakers in an informal, conversational manner, with a group of three or four members. This, when wisely planned, is an exceptionally effective method.

Horizontal — One critic is assigned to cover a certain part of each speech. He discusses all the speeches from that one point of view, comparing them and contrasting good and bad usage. Thus, one critic discusses openings, another has the conclusions, another the organization, another the delivery and so on. This is very effective, but may run into more time than desired unless carefully watched.

Group — The entire audience is invited to give brief opinions on specified speakers or phases of the speeches. This has the value of securing differences of opinion and it promotes wholesome argument.

Demonstration — The critics demonstrate the manner in which the talk should have been given, in addition to saying how it should be done.

Secret — A “critic's critic” is selected to give the critics a going over and show them their own weaknesses. He gives most of his attention to the critics rather than to the speakers.

General Observations—The evaluation of a meeting should include all phases, including presiding officers. Better results are secured if the critics go to the front table, in the same positions as those held by speakers.

The General Critic should take note of the conduct of the meeting, parliamentary procedure, introduction of visitors, greetings

Useful Books

Two new books of interest to speakers come from the Crown Publishers, of New York. Both are filled with excellent material, wisely selected and well adapted to the needs of the public speaker.

The Thesaurus of Humor, by Mildred Meiers and Jack Knapp, carries a total of 5,640 humorous situations, on 4,000 separate subjects. With this in hand, a speaker should be able to find a joke to fit any occasion or subject.

The Thesaurus of Anecdotes is a veritable treasury of usable stories about famous men and women such as can be used to prove a point, illustrate a speech, and enrich your daily conversations.

of guests and members by the proper officers, and all other matters involved.

What to Evaluate

The meeting as a whole:

- Start on time?
- Finish on time?
- Chairman ready?
- Toastmaster prepared?
- Table topic well handled?
- Members showed interest?
- Would a stranger have been favorably impressed?

Evaluating the speakers:

- The opening and conclusion?
- Eye-contact and appearance?
- Posture and gestures?
- Organization of material?
- Effectiveness, forcefulness?
- Enunciation, pronunciation?
- Accuracy of statement?
- Grammar accuracy, timing?

Both books are elaborately indexed. Each carries an introductory chapter explaining how to use the material to the best purpose. They sell for $1.98 each, and may be ordered from the publishers or from the office of Toastmasters International, or from most book stores.

Blame where you must, be candid where you can, And be each critic the good-natured man. — Goldsmith.

Don't Say That

Lewis C. Turner, Akron, Ohio

Don't forget that any statement which can be misunderstood will be misunderstood.

Don't overlook the confidence which comes from knowing a brief outline, such as:

What's wrong with this?

What is the remedy?

What shall we do about it?

Don't let these six demon verbs get you down: Mark the following sentences, using R for right and W for wrong. Then look at the bottom of the page for our check list.

- | | R. | W. |
|---|----|----|
| 1. The house sets back from the road. | — | — |
| 2. He couldn't set himself to work. | — | — |
| 3. Set there on that settee and set your watch. | — | — |
| 4. He laid on the ground and relaxed. | — | — |

| 10. He had set there too long. | — | — |

Be careful about sounding the double o in the following words. The correct sound in these is like the oo in "ooze":

Hoof, poor, roof, root.

Don't overwork your pet adjectives and nouns. Webster lists quite a few for your convenience. Consider what you do to your audience when you let out something like this: "Away over on the edge of the horizon was a great, big, beautiful THING!"

Don't forget to be tactful; it pays dividends. Emulate Lincoln. When a book agent asked him to give a recommendation for the book he was trying to sell, the President sat down and after a little thought wrote this: "Anyone liking this kind of book will find it just the kind of book he likes." Signed: A. Lincoln.

Don't quote international authorities of whom your audience has never heard when there is a well known authority near whom they do know and respect.

Paraphrasing the old Chinese proverb, "One picture is worth ten thousand words," might we not say, "One vivid word picture is better than ten foggy illustrations?"

Your sentences should be marked like this: 1-W; 2-R; 3-W and R; 4-W; 5-R; 6-R; 7-W; 8-R; 9-R; 10-W.

The Navy Will Speak

AT the U. S. Naval Training Station at Farragut, Idaho a Toastmasters Club is being established for the benefit of the officer personnel. Captain I. C. Sowell, commandant of the station, was formerly a member of the San Diego Toastmasters Club, and thus he realizes the benefits to be gained from the work. The Spokane "Tuesday" Toastmasters Club is helping. This club recently put on a demonstration program at the Station for which arrangements were made by Lieutenant Governor George Gordon, with Ray Bigelow, President of the Tuesday Toastmasters, presiding over the meeting. At the close of the formal program, Captain Sowell explained to his officers that it would be necessary for them in the near future to make many talks before all sorts of audiences, and he assured them that their best preparation would be by means of Toastmasters training. District Governor Charles Tyson, who was one of the speakers, reports that steps are being taken to promote a chapter for the benefit of the officers in training at the Station. San Diego Toastmasters are following the developments with keen interest and encouragement to their former fellow-Toastmaster, Captain Sowell.

IN UNIFORM

Sheldon M. Hayden, Past President of Toastmasters International, is stationed in Los Angeles, with the local office of the Navy. He has a first class specialist rating and his duties involve teaching and speaking and public relations. For the present, he is able to maintain his residence in Santa Monica, as before.

And So, I Give You

Herbert S. Hiller, New Orleans Toastmasters Club

THOSE words are your cue to go into your speech. The question is, how to begin.

We have learned that it is bad form to use the ancient "excuse" type of salutation, which runs: "Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking blah-blah!" There ought to be a definite rule on salutations—if (and this is important) salutations are necessary.

Many of us are members of civic clubs. Every week we hear the guest speaker. When he hears those familiar words — "I now give you . . ." or, "Mr. X, the mike is yours" — what do you invariably expect? Yes, you're right—weasel words! They are the words that waste time and suck the lifeblood out of the speech. But do you know how to do better?

There ought to be a rule on salutations. There is a rule. We need to learn it. The rule is flexible and adaptable, but it meets the occasion.

I classify speakers in two distinct groups: (a) the speaker who seeks a favor, and (b) the speaker who gives one.

In class A (the receivers) you may list politicians, social workers and promoters. In class B (the givers) include the successful man — business or professional, the clergy (when not soliciting funds) and educators.

The speaker from our Class A usually begins with the hackneyed form of "weasel" words. "Mr. President, Mr. Toastmaster, members of the Cracker Barrel Club, honored guests, and ladies and gentlemen." (While this beginning takes only a minute or two, it seems longer, probably due to the slow formality. But wait. He is not yet ready to go on with his speech. He has to say: "It is indeed a great pleasure and privilege to have the honor of appearing before such a company of intelligent men and women, and I am not unappreciative of it. Indeed, I am....." That is really shorter than it would be if, as often happens, the speaker is a stranger in our midst, and so feels that he must tell us at length what a bee-yoo-tiful city is ours, and what hospitality is shown by our people. Of course he may forget and mention the name of some other city instead of ours, but the mistake is forgivable, if he will only get going.

The speakers of Class B — the successful man, business or professional, the clergy or the educator—have a different and far better opening technique. This sort of speaker makes his salutation very brief, if he uses it at all. He is satisfied with "Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen."

He is likely to pause for a brief moment, for silence, and then fire his opening sentence — the "Wake up, America"—which brings you to attention and means business.

He has no favors to ask, no solicitations to make, but just a message to deliver. He starts strong, and never winds up with a "thank you for your attention," which is a trademark of the Class A speaker.

There must be a right way to start a speech, just as there are right ways to introduce a speaker. What is the rule? All Toastmasters should know it and use it. You can do enough harm in the first sixty seconds, if you start wrong, to spoil the effect of the entire speech or you can gain attention and rivet interest in the same brief period, sufficient to insure the success of your speech.

Response to "And So, I Give You . . ."

Toastmaster Hiller's article presents several problems that face all speakers. What is the best way to start? How can you be sure that your opening remarks will be appropriate? What is the best salutation? How can you make friends of your audience and create interest in your subject? All of these problems cannot be answered here but help can be given.

The salutation should be very short — "Mr. Chairman, fellow Toastmasters and guests" or "Mr. Chairman and friends" is sufficient. A long list is both unnecessary and dull. Occasionally a distinguished guest should be included, but he must be very distinguished.

The introduction should serve three purposes. First, it should arouse interest in the subject; second, it should motivate by showing the importance of the subject to the members of the audience; and third, it should introduce the purpose of the talk. It should be brief, for the porch must not be larger than the house.

For a more detailed answer to the problems of how to get underway, we suggest that your Club secure the set of phonograph records called the "Take Off and Climb—Eighteen Suggestions for Opening a Speech." These may be ordered through our home office.

What comes from the heart goes to the heart.—S. T. Coleridge.

"Mistaken enthusiasm is the kind shown by the clergyman who sits up all night over a sermon that will put his congregation to sleep the next day."

Attendance 100 Per Cent

At the third anniversary dinner of the Toastmasters Club of Quincy, Illinois, Herman Dege received the surprise of his life when he was awarded a loving cup in recognition of his remarkable attendance record. A charter member of Quincy Toastmasters, he has never missed a meeting of his club, and in addition he has attended all District and Area

Hold That Member

The other day a gentleman visited the Home Office in Santa Ana, introducing himself as a member of five weeks' standing, of one of the Toastmasters Clubs. He stated that he had received no information nor educational help of any sort since becoming a member, and expressed great interest in learning what sort of organization he had joined. His name had not been sent in by his club secretary, and so the Home Office had done nothing for him either.

Such treatment of a new member is the ideal way to lose him. Take him in, collect his fees, announce to the club, "Bill Smith here is a new member. Make him feel at home." Then pay no further attention to him.

meetings, and all joint meetings in which his club has participated. He states that his motive in attending so faithfully is "selfishness," for he always gains far more than he gives, and he has discovered that he has much to talk about which interests his fellow members. He speaks half a dozen languages, and his hobbies, which include stamps, insects, shells, seeds and autographs, have led to correspondence with people in many lands. He operates the "Artisan Furniture Shop" in Quincy, which draws customers from all parts of America.

Conversely, if your club wants to hold its members and do them good, let it recognize its obligation to them from the start.

Every member should be inducted, instructed, and personally conducted through his first steps in the speech art. His name should be reported to the Home Office within twenty-four hours after he becomes a member and he should receive careful attention from program committee and critics.

The abiding interest of the new member will be won by the treatment he receives during his first three months as a member, if at all. Proper attention given the new member beats lamentations over a diminishing membership.

The Speech Contest

THE Inter-Club Speech Contest for the Dunlap Trophy is an outstanding activity in our organization. Once more we are given the green light—the "go ahead" signal, by the committee in charge of plans, of which the chairman is William Bryce, of Huntington Park, Calif.

While it is true that the clubs are feeling the effects of the war, it is also true that there is no better way to create new interest, increase attendance and attract visitors than a lively contest. In fact, gasoline rationing and travel restrictions may have the effect of promoting greater interest in the clubs, because of the inability of members to travel far from home. Thus the local club may be given preferred attention, as attendance involves very small expenditure of gasoline and tires.

It is the hope of the Speech Contest Committee that every club in the organization will get its own contest under way as soon as possible. The winner in every case should be chosen on the basis of actual performance, and never as a sort of popularity vote. When the preliminary eliminations have been completed among the members, there should be a very special "final" for the selection of the club representative to the Area Contest, and this event should be made the occasion of a guest night or a ladies night.

Within a short time all clubs will receive information as to the rules and dates for the contests in the areas and districts. In the meantime, every club should get its own contest into operation, so that all members may have the benefit of the training. Just how the finals will be handled is a problem yet to be solved, but it will be solved in the best possible way by the combined efforts of the members of the committee. The present task is to get the club contests started as early in January as possible, and to select the winner by the end of February.

Call It "Rayshun"

Rationing is bad enough, without making it worse by mispronouncing it.

Remember that ration and rational rhyme with nation and national, and you will be safe. There is no more sense in calling it "rashun" than there would be in saying "nashun." Some people have insisted on shortening the "a"

until the mistake has become fairly common practice, but it cannot be called good practice in any case.

Ration is derived from the Latin ratio, which means proportionate. Nation comes from the Latin natio, from the verb meaning to be born. In both cases, the long a sound is definitely indicated by the Latin origin.

Don't Hide Your Light

Frank Ellis, Los Angeles Toastmasters Club No. 3

Leadership is the need of the world today and successful leadership calls for good public speaking. The Toastmasters have their greatest opportunity to increase their membership and serve their communities. Thousands of men are eager to join a speaker's club. They ought to know about Toastmasters.

The task is one of salesmanship. Information about our work should be available at all times to place in the hands of interested man. The circular entitled "Facts Concerning Toastmasters International" is provided by our Home Office and may be secured without cost by the clubs. This should be wisely and widely used. Mark some of the most important paragraphs before handing or mailing it to a prospect, so as to get his attention on vital points.

Direct Mail Useful

Direct mail is one important method of advertising. A short, well-written letter, mailed to a selected list of prospects for membership, will get results, especially if it carries an invitation to the recipient to attend a certain meeting. The best prospects are those who have some definite interest in public speaking. From teachers of adult classes in speech you can frequently gain valuable suggestions. Similar lists may be secured through contacts with presidents of service clubs and fraternal organizations. Managers and heads of companies like to have their employees secure the training and usually are willing to cooperate. Professional men, such as doctors, lawyers, dentists, accountants, teachers, salesmen and others who meet the public can be approached directly.

Classified Advertising

Classified advertising can be effectively used. It should be run under the heading: "Personals." Here is an advertisement which brought results: "Join the Toastmasters Club. Learn and practice public speaking at low cost." The name and telephone number of the club officer who is appointed to take calls should be included.

Local Publications

There are several organizational magazines and bulletins in every city in which advertising can be purchased at small cost, and it is usually possible to have notices of an educational nature run without any charge.

Notices can be posted on bulletin boards of city, county and state offices, and in other desirable locations. Such a notice may read like this:

Learn and Practice
PUBLIC SPEAKING
at very low cost
Dinner meetings held weekly
Pleasant social atmosphere
Phone MU-1234
for detailed information.

Where two or more Toastmasters Clubs are located in the same city, it might be advisable for them to cooperate for the purpose of jointly launching an advertising campaign.

What Results?

What results can be expected from general advertising? The results are usually much lower than the ordinary person assumes he should expect. But the right sort of advertising always gets results. If one idea is tried and found a failure, others should be used. It is like firing a charge of buckshot, and the probability of bringing in a bagful of game will be much greater than if you use a single bullet.

Selectivity Always

In all membership efforts it must be borne in mind that members of a Toastmasters Club are to be carefully selected as to ca-capacity for development and willingness to use the methods of the club, which include criticism as well as speech practice. For this reason we urge that every prospective member be required to attend at least two regular meetings of the club before applying for admission. This attendance gives him time to see how the club works and also gives the members a chance to get acquainted with him and size him up. Membership should never be so widely opened up as to lead to the inclusion of undesirable men in the club.

The task of selling does not end when a prospect has agreed to attend a meeting of the club. A member should be appointed as his personal host, to help him get acquainted and understand the proceedings. This personal interest will be appreciated, and it should be maintained until the guest has applied for membership. Even then special attention should be given until the new member is thoroughly assimilated.

We Toastmasters have something the public needs to know about. We should publicize it systematically, as we would any other business proposition and keep it up until we have made our sale.

NEW HELPS FOR TOASTMASTERS

Two new bulletins have been issued by the Home Office and are available to all the clubs. One deals with "Membership Problems" and the other is listed as "Program Provender Number Three." They will be sent to any club on request.

Soon to be ready for use is a course for new members of Toastmasters Clubs. This gives detailed instructions on the first twelve speeches, with much other helpful information.

Editorial

IN TIME OF WAR, PREPARE FOR PEACE

On "The President's Page" in this issue, our esteemed leader Ted Blanding tells us that his appreciation of what Toastmasters has done for him is realized more than ever since he came into military life — "proving again that the training in our group fits every condition." President Blanding speaks with authority. He was a successful businessman and community leader before entering the United States Navy, where he is now in overseas service.

Pre-war Toastmasters training was intended to help men to help themselves, to make them more capable in their occupations, businesses or professions and to develop their leadership qualities. That "equipment" has proven its usefulness in the war effort. An outstanding example is the record in the Los Angeles area on behalf of War Bond sales. In the year following "Pearl Harbor," Toastmasters filled more than 3,300 speaking assignments for the Treasury Department.

Undoubtedly, comparable results are being shown in other parts of the country. And there are also the campaigns for the U S O, American Red Cross, Navy Relief, Community Chests and similar worthy causes. These, too, have been aided by Toastmasters—as a group definitely trained to appear in public and get across a specific message.

For as long as the war lasts, Toastmasters will continue using their talents to help speed victory. At the same time, they will foresightedly recognize that as their peacetime preparation in Toastmasters enabled them to fit so capably into wartime effort, just so will it stand them in good stead when peace comes again.

The myriad problems of postwar re-adjustment are bound to affect all of us profoundly, as a nation and as individuals. That Toastmasters will devote their energies wholeheartedly and constructively in the "service of peace," may be taken for granted. Our work during 1942 has brought well-earned recognition of what our organization is and what our members can do. Our postwar influence will be measured more by that recognition than merely by our collective size. Toastmasters know how to approach problems soundly, analyze critically, and discuss intelligently toward enlightenment and solution. Our nation and our communities will need men with these abilities.

As individuals, we can be even more directly benefited after the war by our Toastmasters attainments. Millions of men will be returning to peacetime pursuits. At that time our members will be glad they have the training, the self-confidence and the leadership qualifications which mark the Toastmaster who makes the most of his opportunities.

Looking Ahead

What problems will most urgently confront the people of America on the termination of the war?

How can the Toastmasters Clubs be most helpful both in preparing to meet these problems and in helping to solve them?

These two questions were submitted to a number of leaders in Toastmasters work, with the suggestion that they be made the subject of general discussion in the clubs. Results indicate that wholesome discussion and constructive thought resulted. The questions are offered to all our Clubs. Discuss them and report to the Editorial Board all suggestions of outstanding merit.

The following list summarizes the responses received from those who received the questions. The list obviously is not complete, but it is highly suggestive. Here is material for weeks of "Table Topic" discussions in the clubs.

National Problems.

1. Restoration of the rights provided by our governmental organization which have been sacrificed in the war effort.
2. The complete change-over from war economy to peace economy.
3. Economic and social rehabilitation of returned soldiers and of workers, dislocated through war conditions, so as to prevent mass unemployment and economic disaster.

4. Re-tooling industries for peacetime production; to meet our own needs and those of other nations.

5. Just and effective taxation, to liquidate war debts, prevent inflation, and restore free enterprise and individual initiative.

6. Standards of living—to be raised or depressed.

International Problems.

1. Establishment of international tribunal, to make sure that there shall be "no more war" and to regulate international trade.

2. Assistance to the victim nations.

3. Overcoming of race conflicts and racial prejudices.

4. Re-establishment of religious faith in its broadest aspects.

5. Adjustment of policies of imperialism and colonization.

How can the Toastmasters Clubs help to best purpose? What is our part in world rebuilding? These are the suggestions:

1. By taking the lead in studying problems, and by training others to lead. As an organization, our numbers are too small to make us a great factor, but as individuals we can do much.

2. By working throughout the organization to gather information and ideas and relaying them to the Home Office which, in turn, should correlate and direct our efforts.

3. By seeking every opportunity to inform ourselves and then, by speech within our own clubs and before other meetings, giving out what we know.

4. As individuals and as an organization we must keep alive our interest in freedom and in the support of Christian, American ideals.

Spokane Speakers Expand

Spokane's "Thursday" Toastmasters Club, the third chapter in that city, received its charter on November 12, in a most impressive ceremony. Speakers on the program represented the "Monday" Toastmasters, the "Tuesday" Toastmasters and the Spokane Toastmistress Club, in addition to members of the new chapter. R. W. "Rube" Gronemier, President of the "Thursday" Club, presided. Russell Riggan, of the "Tuesday" Club, acted as Toastmaster. Presentations of the charter and gavel and greetings from Toastmasters International were handled by Lieutenant Governor George Gordon, District Governor Charles Tyson, and Director E. Roy Van Leuven.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN SPEAKING

They say I tell a great many stories. I reckon I do, but I have found in the course of a long experience that common people, take them as they run, are more easily informed through the medium of a broad illustration than in any other way.

News from the Clubs

Mankato, Minnesota

A novelty which adds interest to the programs is called "The Spot." It comes usually at the end of the program and is conducted by the member who furnishes the idea for his particular "spot." Some of these are humorous, some are educational, and all are entertaining. This club has also used a "Take it or Leave it" program variation, with good success.

Van Wert, Ohio

A program contest carried this club through the summer months and into the fall with great enthusiasm. The three members of the Program Committee divided the club membership between them and the three groups worked consistently, each trying to outdo the others in interest and quality of programs presented. The result was a series of unusual and high-grade offerings. Each meeting was carefully graded by vote of the members and at the end of six months the grades were made up and the winners were announced. It is worthy of note that the final gradings for the term showed slightly more than one percent difference between first and second place winners, and the third place was down only three points. Any club interested in the details of this plan may secure them by addressing Richard D. Greenewald, 310 North Market Street, Van Wert, Ohio. Enclose postage, of course.

Notable Publicity

The Duluth Toastmasters Club achieved valuable publicity when its work was featured in a five column spread in the Duluth News-Tribune on December 10. In St. Paul, Norman V. Knutson, chairman of the Toastmasters Club Speakers' Bureau, was featured with pictures and praise in the Pioneer-Press, which gave good attention to his leadership. Englewood Toastmasters were given a half-column in the Chicago Tribune of November 22, which carried the information about the more than four hundred speeches given by members of that club in the war effort. Good work attracts favorable attention and valuable publicity for Toastmasters.

Indianapolis, Indiana

Robert McGinnis, who has been serving efficiently as Governor of the newly organized District Number Eleven, has entered the Army and has reported for training. Ralph Swingley, Deputy Governor and Past President of the Pioneer Toastmasters of Indianapolis has been called to serve as Acting Governor and he will carry on the work which has been so well started by Governor McGinnis. He is Assistant Comptroller of the Indianapolis Water Company and is active in civic and community affairs as well as in Toastmasters work.

Spokane, Washington

Quoted from "The Crumb Sheet" Bulletin of the Tuesday Toastmasters:

LAY OFF, PLEASE!

It's getting me down — I go to Toastmasters feeling fine, at peace with the world and then it begins—"You'll Pay More Taxes, More Taxes, More Taxes, etc, etc, etc." I know it — we all know it. Why not talk about something cheerful, such as "Death Awaits you."

Greensburg, Pa.

Toastmasters of Greensburg are aiding in the war effort by talking to community groups such as Air Raid Warden Instructors, Red Cross, Salvage, Meatless Days and War Bonds. Attendance and membership are being built up. The slogan is "Every member get a member."

Quincy, Illinois

"Speechcraft" has gone over with a bang. Weslie Olson, who has had charge of the project, writes: "We have completed three lessons and our group is really enthusiastic and what is more, the town has been awakened to the work we are doing. We have 31 new members and students. Our meetings are a revelation, with 45 or 50 in attendance each time and the students are all clamoring for a chance to fill out applications for club membership. Properly promoted and followed up, Speechcraft is sure fire."

Los Angeles, California

The conference of District 1-B, held on November 7th, was a great day for the Toastmasters who met at the Elk's Club to study problems of club work in difficult days. Governor Earl Coffin had charge of the meeting, with willing aid by Governor McAninch and other officers as well as by the general membership. The afternoon brought forth a lively discussion of problems of membership and program, with suggestions to meet present difficulties. The evening's dinner session set a high standard for entertainment as well as for definite educational values. Lack of space prevents a complete review of the excellent material presented in these sessions.

Orofino, Idaho

This is a little city of less than 1500 population, but it has a Toastmasters Club doing a fine work in the community. Deputy Governor A. B. Curtis reports: "We have a filled-up roster of twenty-seven members, with half a dozen more waiting to be taken in. The war has taken ten of our 1941 members from us and the membership has changed considerably, but at present we have a very active and interesting group. All the men participate one hundred percent, and they are getting a great deal of good from the work."

District Activities

Harold T. Crane

Gasoline rationing hits our districts hard, but a good organization thrives on difficulties. We have a good organization — one which is doing constructive work, both directly and indirectly to help the war program.

Ours is the only group organized on a national scale which can and does furnish capable speakers for the important causes of the day. Our members have been freely called upon and have readily responded for service with all civic and patriotic efforts.

Much of this patriotic work has been handled through the district and area organizations. In order to maintain such activities it is essential to keep the organization in good condition. This necessitates a certain amount of travel by officers.

Our work should receive favorable consideration from rationing boards and it is recommended that when officers need extra gasoline for their necessary visitation, they should confer with the local rationing board.

By combining war work activities with club visits and area and district meetings, by filling our cars to capacity and by using public transportation where practicable, we should keep our activities to a fairly normal level. Some curtailment of area and district meetings will be necessary and the officers must use mail and telephone to keep in touch with their territories.

Just how the area and district speech contests will be handled is a problem. Perhaps each locality will have to work out its own plan.

To summarize:

1. Our Toastmasters Clubs are contributing much to the war effort.

2. Club, area and district activities must be combined with work on the war campaigns.

3. Additional gasoline allowances may be obtained for war work.

4. Use your ingenuity to keep district work going as well as possible.

5. We have both problems and opportunities. Never was there a greater need for leadership. We have the means for training leaders. We must meet the challenge of opportunity.

USEFUL KNOWLEDGE

"No knowledge we ever acquire is so important as a knowledge of what to say and how to say it—except perhaps, a knowledge of what not to say and when not to say it."

"Let's See Now"

WELL I didn't lose my dollar last month that I offered for a "preposition" sentence. Either times ain't so hard as I thought they was or I am smarter than I give myself credit for. Yes, I got your letter dear S. H. Course that's me at the top of the page; No, I'm not going to turn in my typewriter to the government. (You can't get rid of me that easy and besides if you look closely you'll see mine is of the 1922 vintage. Sure I want to hear from you now that you are in the navy, but don't try too hard and be like the guy who leaned against the screen and strained himself. You could use that dollar; why not enter the contest.

Dear J. B.: You want to know "Who's Gus and what is the purpose of "Let's See Now." First question: It seems as though our president, T. B. and me are the only ones that's not afraid of putting our pictures right along side of what we write. That's me, with the pipe. Now for the second part: This is 1943 and you should know by now that you don't have to have no purpose. If that don't satisfy you just say "it's a military secret.

Ben McEachen, our international treasurer, seems very prosaic but the other day I saw him looking sort of romantic like, so I sauntered over and see what I found he had scribbled down. Boy, will he be surprised when he sees this:

A treasurer must first of all have tact
When it comes to the matter of money;
To collect in the dues as a matter of fact,

And make it seem gay and funny.
A treasurer must watch all the bills,
And care for the funds so intrusted.
If a treasurer is lax in his duties you know

The treasury soon would be busted.
A treasurer must think in terms of finance,

Promptness and things just like that:
And whenever dues are delinquent for long,

It's the treasurer who must pass the hat.

A watch dog of funds, must have funds to guard

And serving you all is a pleasure
But hang it all guys! I'm not much of a bard

So please be kind to your treasurer.
Just send in your dues, when dues are due,

Your new officers know about when
Lets all pull together for Toastmasters
This is all for now—from—BEN.

No Time To Think. You know sometimes a feller gets into something trying to git out of something. One of our Toastmasters was getting ready to speak the other night and I stopped to ask him what he thought about the "second front," "Don't bother me" he said, "I got to talk tonight, this ain't no time to think."

The other day I was sweeping round when the editorial board was meeting and I couldn't help thinking: ain't it funny we have so many things t' think about and so dern little to think with. I may not know as much as Bill but I sure do have good judgment. I was to the convention with him last year and in the middle of the night I noticed his feet sticking out from under the covers of the bed. "Ain't they cold?" I says. "Just about froze off," says he. "Then pull 'em in bed." I tells him, and he says, "Not on your life, I don't want them cold things in bed with me." That's Bill. I found out a long time ago if you're right you can't afford to argue with him, and if you're wrong there ain't no use.

I just about made up my mind that the feller that's got the most t' do is the one that's got the most time to do things for other folks. I was asking a man to do something the other day and he began to tell me all the things he had to do. I didn't believe more'n half of what he said though, 'cause I found out that the feller that says, he's boss of his own home will lie about other things too.

I been going to church quite reglar lately, calculated 'twouldn't me no harm. Got t' sit up on the platform too when there was a visiting preacher tother Sunday. He asked our preacher how long he was to talk and he give it to him straight. He says, "Use your own judgment, but it's has been my experience that the greatest number of souls are saved in the first seven minutes." Just goes to show you, you can learn something no matter what kind of people you associate with.

Some people don't have no idea of time anyway. After a judge had sentenced a prisoner to 99 years he wanted to know if the condemned man had anything to say. "Nothing, Judge," says he "except that you're mighty free with another man's time."

Speakin' of time, some people have such funny ideas. A feller was watching my hogs feeding all over the place and wanted to know why I didn't put a fence around 'em it would save so much time. But what's time to a hog. Say, some speakers might get a lessen from this. I was to a funeral the other day and the preacher was going strong. Everybody was crying, encouraging like, and he was bent on making the most of it. The sexton pulled his coat sleeve. "Better cut it short; it's getting late."

"I know, but this doctrine of the resurrection is vital, very vital." The sexton cut in and says, "Yes, I know, but we got to get our man over there in time for it."

I saw a good headline in the paper yesterday. "DEAD MAN CARRIED ON UNCLE SAM'S PAYROLL SEVERAL WEEKS." It might be a good idea t' prod the workers once in a while. Kind of run to "TIME" articles didn't I? Here's another one. In the encyclopedia I see where "an elephant lives to be a hundred years old." Seems t' us that's a whale of a long time to put up with being an elephant.

THE TOASTMASTERS CALENDAR

What To Do—In January and February

This is the time for the mid-winter meeting of the Area Council. Every club should be represented in the Council meeting.

In the Council meeting and in the individual club meetings, make plans for the year:—

Plan service to the United States. If not already active in the war effort, find where the club can help, and get into the work.

Plan to span the "summer gap." Begin now, in every club, to plan to carry through the entire year without a break.

Plan for educational advancement. When will your club offer the "Speechcraft" course? Decide on the month and work to it.

The Club Speech Contest gets under way in January. Plan for a running contest which will give every man a chance. Select the six who rate highest and let them compete in a final, formal contest in the club, about the last of February or first of March. In small areas, where there are but two or three clubs, select two speakers from each club to appear in the Area finals.

Plan patriotic programs in connection with the February birthdays—Lincoln and Washington. Make these formal and fine. Use decorations to give special atmosphere. Plan programs to connect the present war emergency with great leaders of the past.

Plan the membership policy for the year. Study how to serve the largest possible number of men with leadership training.

In every well-ordered club, the Executive Committee will devote at least one full evening to study of the plans for the year and will lay out a well-considered policy of education and service.

Give your very best to the war effort. Speech alone will not win the war, but it will help mightily.
